HIST 3950-002 - Course Topic: This course surveys the global history and theory of witchcraft and the occult from antiquity to the 20th century, with a focus on events and practices in the West. We will study various notions of magic and demonology, their intersection with witchcraft trials and witch hunting, the role of religion, shifts in ideas about torture and the law, the re-emergence of the occult in the 19th century, the development of wicca and the cult of the goddess and persistent concerns over witchcraft in countries such as Angola in the 20th and 21st centuries. We will consider what might be viewed as good evidence for the supernatural and how this question has shifted over the centuries. This course does not focus exclusively on women and witchcraft but instead tries to place women's experiences (and attitudes towards women) in a broader context using a historical approach to the past, as well as employing both legal and anthropological questions. Students will read and interpret documents and other original sources, learning to understand assumptions about the world that may seem strange to us.

HIST 4957/5957-005 - Topic description: In this course we will explore the American Revolution of 1776-1783, the French Revolution of 1789-1799, and the slave revolt of 1791-1804 in the French colony of Saint Dominique which later became Haiti. Although connected, by both origins and ideals, these three revolutions were quite varied in character due to the divergent contexts, participants, and ultimate outcomes of the uprisings. We will explore and compare these revolutions by examining the participation of women in each of these revolutions as well as how ideas about gender played a role in revolutionary rhetoric. The comparative nature of the course also allows us to explore the intersection of ideas about gender and race in the age of enlightenment. Women and gender are topics often left behind in discussions of war and uprisings, yet participation of women was as vital as that of men in determining the nature and success of these revolts. Women were invaluable as instigators, activists, advisors, propagandists, and soldiers in the crafting and rechartering of political and social roles in their respective societies.

HIST 4957/5957-005 - Topic description: In this course we will explore the American Revolution of 1776-1783, the French Revolution of 1789-1799, and the slave revolt of 1791-1804 in the French colony of Saint Dominique which later became Haiti. Although connected, by both origins and ideals, these three revolutions were quite varied in character due to the divergent contexts, participants, and ultimate outcomes of the uprisings. We will explore and compare these revolutions by examining the participation of women in each of these revolutions as well as how ideas about gender played a role in revolutionary rhetoric. The comparative nature of the course also allows us to explore the intersection of ideas about gender and race in the age of enlightenment. Women and gender are topics often left behind in discussions of war and uprisings, yet participation of women was as vital as that of men in determining the nature and success of these revolts. Women were invaluable as instigators, activists, advisors, propagandists, and soldiers in the crafting and rechartering of political and social roles in their respective societies.
