All students registered for the lab must complete safety training (by watching the ACS safety video and passing the safety quiz). If you have not done this (online) in the last year; go to <https://healthsafety.etsu.edu/index/login> and login using your complete e-mail address (i.e. doej@etsu.edu) and your ETSU network password. The site will welcome you, and then you will need to click on the "Training Modules" link on the left side of the page. A list will appear telling you which modules you are registered for. Click on the "Take" option next to Chemistry Safety. Please watch the video and then read all the safety information in the module. When complete, click on the "Take Training Quiz" link at the bottom of the module and take the quiz. You must complete and pass the quiz before being allowed in lab. You must complete the safety training by August 30, 2012 or you will be purged from both the laboratory (CHEM 1111) and lecture (CHEM 1110). If you are purged, you will not be able to add the courses back until you have completed the safety training. Further, you will not be allowed in the laboratory until you have added back the courses. The last date to add back the courses is September 7, 2012 at 4:30 p.m.

Note: HIST 4957/5957-004 Topic: Gender was an important category of difference in early modern societies and had significant impact on the lives of both men and women. Ideas about the nature of each sex had very real negative and positive consequences for how societies negotiated the roles of men and women and, therefore, individuals' daily lives. The aim of this course is to examine perceptions of gender in the early modern era, not only in Europe but also in other societies that Europeans increasingly came in to contact with during this period. So we will compare and contrast ideas about gender and sexuality across cultures even as they shifted during the early modern period. We will evaluate the nature, extent and importance of gender differences to early modern societies and cultures through a wide range of subjects including: marriage and the family; men and children in the home; health and medicine; sexuality and sexual behaviors; class, politics and the law; religion and witchcraft; colonialism and gender. We will be reading a number of key secondary texts on the topic, as well as reading through primary source documents.

Note: HIST 4957/5957-002 Topic: Before and after the United States won independence in 1783, the nation had to combat foreign intervention in its domestic politics, economic growth, and expansion efforts. This course will deal with diplomacy during key periods in U.S. history through the Civil War. Students will look at the diplomatic successes and failures that led to armed conflicts with France, Great Britain, the Barbary States, Mexico, and the Confederate States of America. Readings will include diplomatic correspondence, congressional debates, statutes, and declarations of war. Based on their readings, students will debate policies and the merits of war.

Note: HIST 4957/5957-004 Topic: Gender was an important category of difference in early modern societies and had significant impact on the lives of both men and women. Ideas about the nature of each sex had very real negative and positive consequences for how societies negotiated the roles of men and women and, therefore, individuals' daily lives. The aim of this course is to examine perceptions of gender in the early modern era, not only in Europe but also in other societies that Europeans increasingly came in to contact with during this period. So we will compare and contrast ideas about gender and sexuality across cultures even as they shifted during the early modern period. We will evaluate the nature, extent and importance of gender differences to early modern societies and cultures through a wide range of subjects including: marriage and the family; men and children in the home; health and medicine; sexuality and sexual behaviors; class, politics and the law; religion and witchcraft; colonialism and gender. We will be reading a number of key secondary texts on the topic, as well as reading through primary source documents.
