Snapshot: needs to be N/A, Credit hours maximum needs to be corrected.*

Course description needs to be in the future tense, and delete "students will be assigned. . ."*

The committee asked that the 'reasons for proposal' point out that Greek language is a required field for graduate work in many fields in the humanities, and that these courses address a deficit in these areas at ETSU.*

Motion to approve both Greek courses was made by Mel Page, motion seconded: Alison Deadman Both proposals approved unanimously.

*c. (2:45 pm)) New Course: ETSU 1010 (Susan Epps) Mel Page & Leslie Adebajo
(This proposal could not be entered into the CPS so it is attached to the email that announced this agenda)*

Proposals were introduced by Susan Eppes

Members of the committee, following a wide-ranging discussion, were inclined to question whether it was good policy to entice students to address the issues with which the contents of this course addresses by offering credit hours, and by attempting to secure the inclusion of this course in major field requirements. Mel Page and Keith Green also noted that any additional required courses subsumes additional open elective hours available to students at a time when, in many fields, major requirements leave few hours, within 120 credit hours, for students to take electives.

Motion to DECLINE APPROVAL made by Allison Deadman, seconded by Mel Page:

Motion passed by 9 votes

Dissenting vote (nay): 1 (Ellen Drummond)

*d. (3:05 pm) New Course: CJCR 3700 (Dennis Hamm) Debbie Dotson & Shawna Lichtenwalner
http://etsuis.etsu.edu/CPS/forms.aspx?DispType=OutputForms&NodeID=5_4a_1&FormID=6&Instance=3562_ (Note: This course will not be required for a major/minor as indicated in the proposal)*

Dennis Hamm and John Whitehead visited the committee to introduce the proposal. Hamm pointed out that Criminal Justice already has one course that focuses on international terrorism, insurgency, and counterinsurgency issues. This course is intended to address a growing area of scholarship in security studies/criminal justice as a field.

Chul-Young Roh noted that two other departments offer courses with similar titles and possible content overlap. Community Health and Sociology are said to offer courses on terrorism and counterterrorism, but the committee did not identify these courses by exact number. (The secretary was unable to locate by title which courses these were, specifically, and wonders if the sociology course was a topical course not yet in the catalog, and wonders if the community health course is PUBH 2950—Disaster Response Training). Committee members sought clearer differentiation of the proposed new courses in criminal justice from these courses, and are requesting notes (e-mail messages will do) from chairs of the departments that teach these courses assuring us that there is not significant content overlap with the proposed course.

Course Proposal: Committee urged Hamm and Whitehead to insert into the Rationale for Proposal language to the effect that this course would bring course offerings more in line with current developments in scholarship in the field. Committee members asked sponsors to clarify what is distinctive about this course, amongst other courses on terrorism.

Allison Deadman questioned having a 3000-level course with no prerequisites. And the sentiments of the committee were that students should have had at least one from a list of courses, or 'by permission of instructor' (inserted at end of catalog description).

Course Description: Present tense. Omit everything before "Examines various types. . ."

Syllabus:

(3:45 pm) Adjournment Move to Adjourn: Mel Page
